MIDNIGHT IN THE WILDERNESS.

A TALE OF 1688.

BY MRS. EMILY W. ELLSWORTH.

It was a cloudless evening in September, a light, soft haze slept on the landscape, subduing, but not impairing the brilliancy of the most beautiful autumnal scenery.—The sun, now scarce an hour above the horizon, threw forward the lengthened shadows of the tulip, the locust, and various forest trees, which in this virgin soil, had attained to a gigantic heighth—his oblique rays, cresting their majestic tops with burnished gold chequered with exquisite light and shadow, the rich and mellow landscape. Occasionally, might be seen some isolated shrub or tree, over which was sprinkled the orange or ruby tinted foilage, indicative of prematurity, or peculiar susceptibility to the first chill breath of autumn. Here and there untrodden wastes of long wavy grass, stretched away to the brink of a wild and graceful stream—a tributary of the Susquehannac, over the opposite banks of which, rose abruptly, perpindecular masses of rock, bold and precipitous, which seemed to frown upon the tranquil beauty slumbering at their base consisting, far as the eye could reach in the unmeasured distance, of tracts of dense forest trees, and their infinitely varied greens, with some few intervals of unwooded meadow. No where was the power to do cultivation felt or seen. The landscape told of no Creator but the Omnipotent. How eloquent is the repose—the [illegible] of so vast a solitude!

Far in the [illegible] might be seen, in a clear [illegible] smoke of a small encampment of [illegible] encampment of the [illegible] Lenape, or Delawares, who had migrated westward [illegible] the main settlement of the tribe. With the exception, no vestige of human habitation could be traced, save one log house—the dwelling of Vanarden. A pioneer of the earlier settlement, he had penetrated these pathless wilds—erected a warm and commodious cabin of logs and clay, neatly plastered within, and hung with the skins of wild animals. One extremity of this dwelling was separated from the other apartments by a partition of trunks of huge trees, filled in with moss; and served as a kennel for supurb hounds. Half buried within a copse of laurels and white blossomed boxhood, midway to the summet of the lofty rock, stood the lone dwelling. Like the nest of the mountain eagle, it seemed elevated above all the peril from the intruding foot of man, and exempt from every danger, except such as might arise from swelling torrents, or sudden gusts which occasionally swept through gorges of the range, with irresistible violence.

Such was the chosen retreat of Vanarden—his hopes, his wishes, were all bounded by the circling horizon. In front of the cottage, upon a rude bench, sat a maiden, who had scarce yet reached her eighteenth winter. In her hand she held a rack or distaff, which she seemed to have taken up mechanically, for she was evidently abstracted; her eyes and her thoughts being fixed on some far distant object.

Marion was not, like ordinary heroines of romance, a being of faultless dazling beauty. She was a very woman. Yet her faults were only the excess of her virtues and her beauty was from the bright emancipations of an enthusiastic soul—a heart glowing with love and tenderness to all God's creatures. Health, good humor, and contentment, cast round her a perpetual halo.—Youth gave elasticity to her step, and lent a bright carnation to her cheek; while her voice, like sweet music, sank into the very hearts of her hearers. She was now in the attitude of an expectant, and the careful arrangement of her simple toilet, evinced that it was for no indifferent visitor. Her dress, having no reference to the fashion of the period, was a robe of white linen gathered in folds around the throat, and falling below the ankle, was confined to the waist by a cincture of leather, ornamented with the the delicate quills of the porcupine, from the nether edge of which, dropped a fringe of small feathers, the spoils of the briliant oriole. The front of her zone was secured by a small arrow, formed of some dark wood, resembling ebony, highly polished, and finished by narrow bands, or flat rings of chased silver. Her little feet were encased in half boots or moccasins of dressed deer skin, embordered like the girdle.—From her neck suspended a cross, made of the same materials with the arrow, and of similar workmanship.

Couched at the feet of the young girl, was a lion-like mastiff—the faithful Tromp, which, four years, had been her constant companion and guard. Just within the door was placed a rifle, with other accoutrements of the hunter, together with a pile of small game.

Vanarden, after a day of exertion, with weary step, was kenneling his terrier, and feeding his large canine family, while his daughter was endeavoring to reconcile herself to her disappointment. Already the beautiful things of earth were fading from the sight, and of the maiden were damp with the dews of evening. Lingering on the threshold to listen yet a little longer for well known steps, she patted a kind good night to a dog, who, as she drew the bolts within, stretched himself upon a mat before the cabin door, and commenced his nightly watch.

Marion was to be married in the morning; but where was the priest? And where was Rudolph?

From her thirteenth year Vanarden's daughter had shared his solitude, and lightened by her engaging attentions, and cares and pains from which no situation is entirely exempt. How grateful to the doating father were the untiring assidnities of the gentle girl, whose highest earthly happiness was found in the approving smile of her parent. Early grief rather than time, had blanched his thin hair, and given him the appearance of advanced age, while yet his broad and sinewy frame was equal to the hardiest achievments of his youth. Still he could forget the bear from his haunts among the caves of the cliffs, and return laden with the shaggy tropines—the couches and curtains of his dwelling. Still he could chase the deer from hill to dell, doubling and winding, with the speed—the fire—and almost the recklessness of boyhood; putting in daily requisition, his skill in the peculiar wood craft of the American forrester, to supply his table, and to furnish food for his hounds, as well as to contribute to the accumulating boards of furs which he exchanged for ammunition, and such necessaries as the forrest could not supply.

Marion was content, for she scarce remembered any other life, and hitherto the calm current of her years had flowed serenely on, in the quiet discharge of her simple duties. Her father had learned at least the art of being happy. Time had, in some measure, obliterated the grief caused by the death of his excellent wife, and transferred to the youthful Marion the confiding fondness with which he had been wont to regard [illegible] the mother of his child. Vanarden, while yet a mere youth, was among the early adventures and founders of the colony of New Amsterdam, on the island of Manhattan, and remained in that flourishing settlement until the decease of his father, several years subsequent to the loss of his beloved wife. Vanarden had married from romantic attachment, a bonni blue eyed Scotch lass who lived but two years after their union—and dying, bequeathed to his care, her infant daughter—inheritress of her mother's beauty and of her many admirable qualities. Until [illegible] attained, [illegible], while Marion was yet a child, to penetrate into the heart of the wilderness, there to revel in the luxury of solitude. Unshackled by conventional customs—unrestrained by laws, so wholesome and so indispensable in communities, he knew no law but the [illegible] his own will, was free as the sportive breeze that rippled the bright waters of the Juniata, and though not proprietor of a single acre, felt himself one of the masters of this unmeasured domain—a territory equal to his highest ambition—a wealth beyond the reach of want.

It was about the period of the celebrated treaty of Shackamaxon, when, by the philanthopic policy of the sagacious Penn, his just and most conciliaty conduct towards the Aborigines, had secured peace and friendship to the intruding white men, that our hero ventured to fix his home in the wilderness of the interior over which extended his benign legislation.

Then, and there, the red man, was the friend of the daring pioneer, and sometimes came to his door to exchange the customary tokens of amity—to eat bread with his pale brother, and not unfrequently, in tempestuous weather, to accept the offer of a pallet for the night. Then would the Indian, taciturn as he is often represented, rehearse the exploits of the chase, and recount the warlike deeds of the chief of his tribe or of some near relative, already gone to the Great Spirit who rules over the world of the red man.

Among the occasional visitors from distant Indian encampmem, was a youthful chief of one of the tribes of the Iroquois, who, having seen Marion, had dared to make proposals to Vanarden for his daughter. He was repulsed, of course; with courtesy indeed, but with a firmness of manner that left no hope.

Aronack was a man that a woman could not choose but admire, and, at the same time, how must she fear him two! Tall, muscular, symmetrical, active as the roebuck, and graceful as the wild horse on his native prairie; he was foremost in every danger, insensible to fatigue and cunning in the chase, as in all the wiles of Indian warfare. His dress, although in accordance with the costume of his nation, was elegant and costly of its kind—he looked a very model for the chisel of some modern Phidias or Praxiteles. This was the outward man; but dark and fiery were the passion of ferocity over his handsome features.

Aronack was the most implacable of his race; many of whom, among some noble qualities, cherish deerprooted love of revenge, and the vindictive remembrance of injury. Could you have seen the scowl of those angry eyes—the heavings of his broad chest—the [illegible] gutteral mutterings, which escaped from, between, his closed teeth, while his hand, trembling with passion, involuntary closed over the haft of his two edged knife, you would have shrunk, as from a demon. How like, indeed, he seemed to the arch-fiend, plotting the destruction of innocence!

The nuptials of Marion were at hand. Could Aronack forgive his fortunate rival? Could he pardon Marion the disgrace of a rejection?

"Never" cried the infuriated savage, as he strode from the presence of Vanarden. "Never, Rudolph, shall the pale girl be your's. Blood! blood! Nothing but blood can wash away an indignity like this! And I will have it!"

And who is Rudolph, whom the "pale girl" so greatly prefers to this strange devotee at the shrine of love? Rudolph like Vanarden was a forest ranger, and being a prime shot, of unerring accuracy was called by the trappers, "Rudolph the True." The grandfather of Rudolph was a Swede, and among the earliest, and as it proved, unsuccessful colonists, on the banks of the Delaware, during the reign of Gustavus Adolphus. This feeble band were finally defeat in their conflicts with the Dutch, now so firmly established in their new territory, that the infant colony of Scandinavians was wholly unable to compete with them.

Thus they become disheartened, some returned to their father-land, others dispersing among their more powerful neighbors, the Hollanders were for a time extinct.—At this juncture, the father of Rudolph removed to a small French settlement in Canada, where he married a French demoiselle, and immediately thereafter engaged in the poultry trade.

Rudolph, with all the hardihood of the northman, possessed the sprightliness and elasticity of the French temperament.—With an inexhaustible fund of humor and wit, qualities most highly praised by the isolated forester, the exceeding loneliness of whose life, rendered the arrival of a visitor a peculiarly welcome event. Rudolph's visits were hailed with joy, for mirth was his inseparable companion, and he brought cheerfulness, as it were sunlight itself, to the heart of his host. Rudolph and Vanarden frequently hunted in company, and made common stock of the furs obtained in these excursions, which the former would dispose of at the most convenient mart, furnished to the recluses, by exchange, some of the essentials of life.

The cottagers had retired. Deep in the sleep of health, and sweet the repose that is earned by active toil. No iron tongue tolled the passing hours; or patient watchman gave assurance that "all is well." They slept—though the melancholy whipperwill repeated his sad complainings—the screech-owl hooted her forebodings of evil, and the aurora borealis lighted up its fearful fires to tell of coming dangers. Now it was that the lurking Indian crept from a fissure of the mountain, and descended stealthily to the cabin. With light and noiseless step, he gained the little casement of Marion's room, in rear of the dwelling, opened it, and pressed unheard, but not without difficulty, his herculean frame through the narrow window. Pausing, he listened for an instant, then glided to the pallet of the slumberer. Beautiful in that pale light, was the marble whiteness of her placid and innocent brow, over which, parted, in rich luxuriance, her bright wavy tresses. Her person was scrupulously covered with a robe of white linen, and a mantle formed of the plumage of birds, interlined with down, was folded round her, constituting a warm and graceful covering.

Aronack bent over the low couch, gazed on the unconscious being, and listened to her quiet breathings. For a moment his cruel heart repented. "Can I? Can I?" involuntarily escaped his lips. "But can I spare her to become the wife of that grinning devil, Rudolph? It must be done!" His hand grasped the two edged knife which he had whetted to a razor's keenness. It gleamed in the soft light of the stars, as he raised and aimed it at the heart of the helpless girl.

Hah! One loud prolonged bowl, and Tromp [illegible] through the open window, seized the throat of the savage. But, oh, the ready knife! [illegible] for another sacrifice, it was quickly [illegible] in the side of the faithful dog. Free thus from the gripe of the [illegible] animal, Aronack turned to finish his murderous work. Marion was gone! The terrified girl had vanished through a door behind her couch, which communicated with the room of her father.

The loss of her affectionate and faithful dog was Marion's first sorrow. Her own peril and escape were for a time forgotten, as she drew the head of her companion, guardian, friend, upon her lap, and with bitter tears and lamentations bewailed his inevitable death. "Live, dear Tromp, live for my sake!" she exclaimed, caressing him; while Vanarden endeavored to staunch the flowing wound. Their cares were vain. Turning his eyes upwards to the tearful face of his mistress, he nestled to her bosom, and, with low moans expired.

Thus occupied, her heart filled with indignation and sorrow, Marion perceived the approaches of day, the morning, she believed, her wedding day. The bright and beautiful world looked joyful, and smiled a thousand welcomes on the glorious sun, as he rose in unclouded brilliancy from the deep blue horizon. The rich and ever varying notes of the mocking bird echoed the

COMMUNICATION.

To the Editress of the Huntress.

MADAM:—I hear much talk about who is to be General Harrison's Cabinet, and who is to be our next President—a National Bank, the Tariff &c. &c, I should like to hear your opinion upon these questions.

As the ensuing Presidency is designed to be a reform of the abuses asked for—nay demanded by the people, and you are, madam, as I understand, in favor of reform and wield a fearless independent pen, some of your friends would like, therefore, to hear your opinion on these things.

Very Respectfully, Yours,

AN OLD-FASHIONED FARMER.

December 19, 1840

In answer to our straight-forward correspondent; in the first place we are no judge of the matters referred to us in his letter; we leave all those things to the people or to those of the other sex whom the people confide in.

We have only made it our business to point out what ought not to be done, not what ought to be done by public men. To detect and expose fraud and corruption—to strip the mask off of hypocracy and keep the Constitution of our country up to the eye of the citizen.

As the Constitution was not formed for a few, or in other words for "a party," but for the benefit of all our citizens, we are of no party. We expose the faults of all parties and esteem every man agreeably to his merit. This is strictly republican.

If we are to be governed by a party the Government ceases to be a republic and becomes an absolute tyranny in the hands of a few; as in the case of the present Administration. But the people have vetoed this species of Government, and we trust it will be a warning to all succeeding administrations to "be just (to all men) and fear not." And we think General Harrison is that man.

But it is impossible to tell what the future may bring fourth. We had the same opinion of General Jackson. But the result proved otherwise; and the same result may occur from the same cause under the administration of General Harrison: viz. the imprudent interference of false friends.

THE CABINET.

We think it very improper for persons who are unqualified to judge, (as we certainly are) to give an opinion upon a matter of such importance; for, upon the selection of the cabinet much of the praise or blame of the Administration will depend. But so far as our very poor judgment serves, our correspondent is welcome to our opinion.

We have seen it announced in some of the papers, upon supposition, that Hon.——— Ewing of Ohio is to be Post Master General. He will no doubt discharge the duties of the office with honesty and ability.

Col. Bell of Tennessee is spoken of as Secretary of War. This will be a happy choice. The Colonel is well qualified to be trusted in any part of the Cabinet.

Hon. John J. Crittenden is spoken of for Attorney General. A better choice perhaps could not be made. Hon. Senator Preston is also named for the Cabinet.

All these are sterling men. But we confess our fears of taking such able men out of Congress before the affairs of the country are settled upon a more judicious plan than it has been for the last few years.

All this, however, is merely rumor, and it is probable that no one as yet knows who are to form the Cabinet of the new President.

For the remaining portion of the Cabinet we have nothing but contradictory gossip. Hon. Senator Webster (if he will serve) will doubtless have the first offer.

Hon. John Sergeant of Philadelphia has been mentioned by some of the Pennsylvania Editors as a gentleman who ought not to be overlooked in dispensing with the highest offices in the Government. Mr. S. is said to be a man of superior talents, and we know him to be of an amiable disposition, and of strict purity in principle; but we rather fear he has too great a leaning toward "Church and State" and perhaps a great deal toward abolition. We may however be mistaken.

If we must have a cabinet member from Pennsylvania, why not take Hon. James Buchanan? There is no better man.—"Oh! but he is a Van Buren man; fye on you Mrs. R." some may say. Well if this new Administration is to be all on one side, wherein will it differ from the present?

We have several able men in our eye; Senator Mangum of N. C. Hon. H. A. Wise of Va., Hon. W. C. Dawson of Georgia; the latter a gentleman who has never wavered in his principles. Through good and evil report, he has clung to the side of the people. "Solitary and alone," while South Carolina and Alabama were raving against the Administration, and while his colleages fled like sheep, he was where he is now, and where are they? He is the only member of those stormy times, and more recent calm, that refused to bend the knee to usurped power. Mild, modest, and unassuming—few know the man, and fewer know his worth.

These are the kind of men office-seekers dread. Nor should any consideration have induced us to say ought on the subject, but for the alarming appearance of office-seekers already in motion, which threaten to storm the White House itself. Enough from all accounts to swallow up the whole of the public revenue.

This is an evil accrueing from the pernicious policy of those who brought Mr. Van Buren into power; who, it is well known owed his elevation to office-holders, public contractors, and office-seekers.

It is those kind of men who are now busy in making cabinets, and nominate those whom they think will favor their views, Congress, the President, and the people ought to set their faces resolutely against the practice. Such men would sell their God for money.

THE NEXT PRESIDENT.

In reply to this querry, Hon. Henry Clay of Kentucky will be the next President.—We see nothing to prevent it, if he will consent to serve.

We know nothing of Banks or Tariff and would rather be silent on the subject.

As to a National Bank; one which might re-establish the currency, under proper restrictions, would, perhaps, benefit the country; but we hope never to see a Bank in this country again, speculating in real estate and in chartered monopolies; and that too by many of those pious gentlemen we wat of.

CONGRESS.

Very little has been done in the House excepting their milage bill. The members are busily employed in cutting out work and ogling the ladies.

Not a word has been said yet of the unfinished business. What does this mean? Who are in fault now? We are interested in this business and wish to place the blame in the right quarter.

PENSIONS.

We shall resume our exposures of the Hall-Benton report very shortly, if "we do be spared" and the unfinished business is not taken up. We shall "move the previous question."

Gentlemen, gentlemen; ye have twice been threatened with the vengeance of Heaven—once by water, once by land and twice have ye been spared. Beware of the third time and pass all the revolutionary claims, lest "a worse evil befal you." Recollect the ALL SEEING eye is upon you, and he is pledged to defend the cause of the widow.

APROPOS.

Much has been said about making collections and getting up fairs for the poor and destitute. Be it known to ye therefore, that there are THREE CHILDREN next door to ours that have neither wood nor vituals. Let us see your charity in acts, not in words.

THE DORCAS SOCIETY.

We have something to say of this institution, but shall defer it at present.

MORMONS.

This sect is increasing rapidly. It is reported that some respectable people have joined them. We find the following in the Greensburg (Pa) Intelligencer.

Mormons arrived from England.—The Packet ship North America, which arrived at New York last week, brought in her steerage 200 passengers, the whole of whom were "Latter Days Saints," or Mormons, bound for the Mormon settlement at Quincy. The Liverpool Chronicle states that upwards of 2,000 are in treaty to embark early next spring for the same locality. A great portion of these who sailed in the North America are members of the abstinence society, and are from Leicestershire and Herefordshire.

From this it appears the Gospel-spreading, both in this country and in England are not very successful, excepting in one thing; viz., making money.

These Church and State gentlemen are now, or will shortly be, in the enjoyment of a glorious harvest produced by their own labor.

DEMOCRACY UNMASKED.

Having our chrismas cakes to bake this week, we shall use the sisors and give a spicimen of those gentlemen (misnamed Democrats) who so long have set the people at naught.

We have never seen so much dismay in the Federal Whig ranks as is apparent at this moment. They feel that their small game is over. The most sagacious of their party see clearly that there is no reasonable prospect on which can be placed a whole hope of Harrison's success—and they are sadly crest-fallen—Union, July 13.

HOW GOES THE STATE?

Democratic by 6 to 10.000 majority.

This is our lowest estimate—it cannot be a peg less. Gov. Polk's announcement of his determination to be a candidate for re-election has placed the matter beyond all doubt. His power of dispelling error with the potent weopons of sober truth is unequaled—and the Feds know it.

MIDDLE DIVISION.—We can assure our friends of the right and left wings of the State, that if there be any thing truthful in the signs of the times we are doing nobly in Middle Tennessee. The opposition have made themselves ridiculous by concerted attempts to over-awe through partisan military perades. coon-worship, and the most palpable and flagrant misrepresentation.

[Union July 16.

We are satisfied that one more such Convention at Nashville would add to the democratic hosts of Tennesse, five thousand sensible men. [Union, August 19.

VIRGINIA AND TENNESSEE.—The Richmond Enquirer says—Mr. Van Buren's majority cannot, from present indications, be less than 5000 votes. Tennessee will do better than that, Mr. Ritchie—6000 is our lowest notch.

[Union Sept. 17.

CHEERING FROM TENNESSEE.

The Democrats in this State are aroused and sweeping every thing before them.—The Federalists are giving way in every direction, and scarcely a doubt remains but Tennessee will be true to her principles.

[Huntsville Democrat.

The truth is bad enough, without telling so many falsehoods. This is the fruits of buying up the press. No one, not even the purchaser can depend on a man who will sell himself for money. These are the men who tell so many falsehoods upon General Harrison and to reward them the Sub-treasury was got up.

From the same paper we find Hon. John Blair our very true and trusty brother, of pious memory and formerly a member of Congress from Tennessee has been aiding and abetting in those unchristianlike assertions.

A person who wore a suit of homespun cloths, stepped into a house in Boston on some business where several ladies were assembled in the inner room. One of the company remarked, in a low voice (thought sufficiently loud to be overheard by the stranger,) that a countryman was in waiting, and agreed to make some fun.

The following dialogue ensued:

'You're from the country, I suppose?'

'Yes I'm from the country.'

'Well sir, what do you think of the City?'

'It has got a tarnal sight of houses in it'

'I expect there are a great many ladies where you came from?'

'O yes a wonderful sight, just for all the world like them,' pointing to the ladies.

And you are quite a beau among them no doubt?'

'O yes, I beau's them to meetin' and about.,

May be the gentleman would take a glass of wine,' said one of the company.

'Thank'e,don't care if I do.'

'But you must drink a toast.'

'I eats toast what aunt Debby makes, but as to drinkin' it, I never heard the like.'

What was the surprise of the company to hear the stranger speak clearly as follows?

'Ladies and gentlemen, permit me to wish you health and happiness, with every other blessing this earth can afford; and I advise you to bear in mind that we are often deceived in appearances. You mistook me, by my dress, for a country booby. I for the same cause, thought these men to be gentlemen—so the deception is mutual.—I wish you a good evening.'

The funniest word that we know of in our language is horse-man-ship.

"I'm for change," as the loafer said when he stole the bag of specie.

A lady once borrowed a dictionary of an acquaintance, on returning the book, she was asked how she liked it. 'Oh!' replied the fair one, 'the words are beautiful, but I don't think much of the story."

[St. Joseph Times.

Fine connections are apt to plunge you into a sea of extravagance, and then they will not throw you a rope to save you from drowning.

When you look at a distant object, and appear to see too leave off drinking; you have had too much.

"Pete, are you into them sweetmeats agin?" No marm, them sweetmeats is into me."

The way to wealth is as plain as the way to market—follow industry and frugality and you will be sure to find it.

"What is the difference between me and a new novel?" enquired a highly rouged damsel of her beau. "It is this," said he. 'A new novel is read because it is interesting; and you are interesting because you are red."

A Sailor's Gallantry.—A travelling article says that a sailor who had spent nearly all his days on the blue waters, and knew little of land gear, came ashore the other day, and in passing up the street saw a little woman going along with a large muff before her. He stepped up very politely to her, and offered to carry it, as he was going the same way.

J. F CALLAN

Has just received a fresh supply of

Perfumery, Fancy Soaps and Cosmetics,

Cold Cream.

This exquisite preparation will be found particularly efficacious in all cuticular irritation, and as an emollient, its soothing and cooling properties stand unrivalled. No pains have been spared to produce it of the rarest quality, from the purest of materials, and we confidently offer it as an article of first rate toilet standing, which if equalled, certainly cannot be surpassed by any composition whatever.

Florida Water.

A most delicious perfume and agreeable exchange from the Eau de Cologne, whose delicacy and potent fragrance it rivals. From its retentive qualities, it will be found an economical and powerful distributor of sachets for handkerchiefs or linen.

Bears' Oil

This preparation is recommended as possessing all the restorative qualities of the Bears' Grease, without the unpleasantness attending its use, and to the strength it acquires by concentration, a much less quantity will produce the same result It has also another property—that of purity, which however carefully Bears Grease may be prepared it cannot possess, indeed the Oil has so far superceded the use of the Grease by its superior clearness that the latter is but in little or no demand. The Oil now offered has been clarified from all impurities in the most skilful manner, by a chemical process, and is rendered very agreeable by being highly scented with the pure Persian Otto of Roses

GRECIAN DYE.

Directions for Use.—1st. Too great care cannot be taken to cleanse the hair from grease, as the dye will not take effect unless it be entirely removed. To do which, wash the hair in a solution of about a quarter of an ounce of pearl-ash to a quart of water, until it be perfectly clean; and, when it has become perfectly dry, is fitted to receive the preparation.

2d. To prevent the Dye from coloring the skin grease the part around the hair which may be liable to be touched with it.

3d. To apply the Dye, shake it well, so as to raise the settling at the bottom; then, (having a piece of spongeready, tied to the end of a small stick, about an inch wide,) pass a small comb into the roots of thehair to prevent the skin becoming discolored, pour a little into a cup or glass, comb the hair in one direction, dip your sponge into the dye, and rub it over the hair until it becomes quite wet; let it remain till dry; then comb the hair in an opposite direction; repeat it till brown, and so on till the hair becomes black. The application could be made, the person sitting in the sun, for it ce brighter the atmosphere, the finer the dye will tones. If applied at night, or in the damp, it would have the desired effect.

4th. The day after the application of the dye wash the dye in a solution of salt. (Form it o ion ounce of salt to one pint of rain water.) This will set the color, and give it brilliancy.

Lastly. To avoid soiling the Skin or Linen, throw a cloth over the shoulders, wear gloves to protect the hands, and should any of the liquid accidentally drop upon the skin, wipe it off immediately with a wet towel, and be careful not to take overmuch of the dye in the sponge at once. It may not be amiss to observe, that after the dye is set, washing the hair will rather improve than be any injury to it.

Honey Water.

As a wash for the hair, or for imparting a mild fragrancy to linen, this perfume possesses a delicacy which renders it peculiarly agreeable; in warm weather, from its revifying properties, it must always be considered as a neat and appropriate article for the toilet.

OTTAR GUL.

SPIRIT OF ROSES.

The perfume of the Rose has something so transcendently etherial, that it obtains in Persia, its native home, the name of Ottar or Soul: and the east of Roses, when these flowers break into bloom, is there celebrated with all that can be conceived of Eastern magnificence. To describe its qualities would be superfluous—sufficient it is to say, that the Spirit of "Roses" is inferior only to the genuine Persian Ottar, and indeed it approximates so closely as to be but with great difficulty distinguished. As a favorite with the fair, their own lovely type, it will ever stand unrivalled, and be cherished by them so long as taste and elegance shall remain.

Rose Water.

This is an article of universal repute, so much so, that it has even found its way into the mysteries of culinary skill, by which it is employed in imparting a flavor to sauces, &c. It behoves every one, therefore, to take particular care from whence they obtain it. Kimball and Co. pledge themselves that their Rose Water is a simple distillation from the queen of flowers, and that it is entirely free from any artificial compound; consequently, its native delicacy and fragrancy are not only preserved but its use rendered innoxious as that of pure spring water.

Amboyna Lotion.

Next to cleanliness, (says the most celebrated dentist of the day,) I know nothing so conducive to the preservation of the Teeth and Gums, or to be purifying the breath, as the Amboyna Lotion and I advise every one whose a value upon their possession invariably to use it."

With such strong remarks upon its merits, it would be futile in the proprietors to add in praise one word of their own; they will therefore confine themselves to giving proper directions for its use.

The Teeth should be cleansed with a soft brush and the Botanical Tooth Powder every morning and the mouth and Gums rinsed with the Lotion. By attending to these simple directions, those who have good Teeth will infallibly preserve them and those whose Teeth have a tendency to decay will have the consolation of discovering that they can proceed no further.

STEAMBOAT AUGUSTA--NOTICE.

The Steamboat Augusta will land and take off passengers at the following landings on Potomac River, every other day from date, viz: Pye's and Budd's Landings, Maryland shore, and at Quantico, on the Virginia side of the river.

WASHINGTON BRANCH RAILROAD.

The passenger trains on this road will daily start as follows, to wit.

From Washington for Baltimore, at 6 o'clock, a m and at 4 3-4 do. p m

From Baltimore for Washington at 9 o'clock, a m and at 4 do p m

Passengers by the morning train, if proceeding westwardly, can connect with the western train on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, at the Relay House, reach Frederick in time for the western stages that leave there at 12 o'clock noon, or Harper's Ferry in time for the evening train to Winchester; while passengers travelling eastwardly are conveyed through to Philadelphia without unnecessary detention at Baltimore, reaching Philadelphia in time for the evening line to New York, and thus accomplishing the journey from Washington to New York in one day.

Under no circumstances whatever can the train be delayed beyond the hour fixed for starting. It is, therefore, respectfully suggested that passengers procure their tickets the previous evening; to enable them to do which, the office will be kept open till 7 1-2 o'clock, p. m

NOTICE TO WESTERN TRAVELLERS.

FARE 2 dollars cheaper than any other line to Frederick or Wheeling.

The Fredericktown stage leaves the office opposite Gadsby's Hotel, daily, for Frederick and Wheeling. Passengers securing their seats at this office or in Baltimore, have a decided preference over all other passengers that steam it, for the West.

The stage will leave Fredericktown daily on the arrival of the Western stages, and arrive at Washington in time to take all Southern routes. By this line the passengers will arrive at Winchester the same day.

The coaches and teams on this route are of the first quality, with skilful and attentive drivers, and the proprietor pledges himself that every attention and accommodation will be given to the passengers who give this line their patronage.

AGENCY AT WASHINGTON.

JAMES H. CAUSTIN, (late of Baltimore having made this city his permanent residence and located his dwelling and office directly opposite to the Department of State, will undertake with his accustomed zeal and diligence the settlement of claims generally, and more particularly claims before Congress against the United States or the several departments thereof, and before any board of commissioners that may be raised for the adjustment of spoliation or other claims. He has now in charge the entire class arising out of French spoliations prior to the year 1800, with reference to which, in addition to a mass of documents and proofs in his possession, he has access to those in the archives of the Government.

Claimants and pensioners of the Navy fund, &c. bounty lands, return duties, &c. and those requiring life insurance, can have their business promptly attended to by letter, (post paid,) and thus relieve themselves from an expensive and inconvenient personal attendance.

Having obtained a commission of Notary Public, he is prepared to furnish legalized copies of any required public documents or other papers. He has been so long engaged in the duties of an agent, that it can only be necessary now to say that economy and prompt attention shall be extended to all business confided to his care; and that, to enable him to render his services and facilities more efficacious, he has become familiar with all the forms of office.

SHERWOOD'S ELECTRO MAGNETIC REMEDIES FOR CHRONIC DISEASES of the class of Hypetrophy, including the forms of Scrofula, viz: Tubercula Consumption, Dyspepsia, Chronic Disease of the Liver, of the Heart of the Spleen, of the Kidneys, of the Spine, White Swellings, Scrofulous Sore Eyes, Scald Head King' Evil, Leucorrhœa, Chlorosis, Menorrhaga or Females complaints.

These are but different modifications of the same disease, arising from the same cause, distinguished by the same diagnosis, and curable by the same remedies. Their common cause is an irregular action of the Electro-Galvanic forces in the system; they may all be detected by pressure upon the sides of the vertebræ and glands of the neck which elicits the Electro-Galvanic symptom, and they may be cured by these Electro-magnetic remedies: The latter are accompanied by a compendious medical treatise, explaining the principles she discovery upon which they are founded, only stating the manner in which they are to be applied In this work Dr. Sherwood demonstrates the fact that every part of the human body, together with every particle of animate and inanimate matter is either in a negative or positive state of electricity, and that every motion, in all matter, whether in the largest masses or in the smallest particles, is produced by the attracting and repelling forces of this universal principle. The morbid action which produces disease of the organs or limbs, he proves to be occasioned by the undue preponderance of one of these forces in the system and his remedies restore health by subduing this irregular action to an equilibrium. By this means the very seeds of the disease are eradicated, and a permanent cure effected, even in cases where all hope of relief from other sources is abandoned. The Electro-Magnetic remedies are the only preparations applicable to this prevailing class of diseases and they never disappoint the confidence reposed in them. The symptoms of the class of diseases to which they are applicable can be discovered, under the directions contained in the work which accompanies them without the aid of a physician, and they can be used with perfect safety and success without detection or inconvenience, or any other further advice than this work affords. PROPOSALS

PUBLISHING BY SUBSCRIPTIONS

The Authentic Report of the Controversial Discussion, that took place in the City of Dublin, in the year 1827, between the Rev. THOMAS MAGUIRE, and the Rev R. T. P. POPE.

This celebrated work, the most remarkable controversal discussion of modern times, having gone through twenty-one editions in England and Ireland, where it is still read with extraordinary vidity, and in the United States passed through three editions, all of which are exhusted to the last copy; and the demand for it from all quarters, Catholic and Protestant, being still very great, it is proposed to re-publish it in Weekly Numbers at such a price as to put it within the reach of all without oppressing any.

Those in the City of N. York, who wish the work, will be served by leaving their names with the publisher, John Doyle, 294, Pearl Street, those at a distance can have it regularly mailed to them, by remitting one dollar in a post-paid letter.

Agents:—Mr. Patrick Conolly, 118 Ann St. Boston;—Henry Mc Keon, Willings Alley, Philadelphia;—Mr. John Farnon, Utica, N. Y.;—Mr. Mathew McLeod, Georgetown, D. C.;—Mr. Peter Haynes, Savannah, Geo.—and the office of the U. S. Catholic Miscellany, Charleston, S. C.

It is a well known fact that this great controversy has converted more sectaries to the Catholic Church in England and Ireland, than any other work whatever; and has also been the happy means of bringing great numbers to the true faith in the United States. It is therefore hoped that every sincere Catholic will lend his aid, by putting down his name, to prevent so valuable a work from being out of print, more particularly when for his subscription, he will receive the utmost value.

CONDITIONS.

1. One thousand copies only will be printed,

2. The paper and print will both be excellent.

3. It will be issued in weekly parts at twelve and a-half cents each part payable on delivery.

4. The number of parts it will make cannot be ascertained, with accuracy at present, but should it exceed eight, the overplus will be given gratis.
